Course Description

Conceptions of the human body underwent significant development in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, a time when the boundaries between the public and the private were constantly being drawn and re-drawn. Through select readings of seventeenth- and eighteenth- century essays, novels, and poetry, this course seeks to excavate the import of the fleshly body in the literature of this period, and more importantly, chart a history of individuality and subjectivity that is grounded in the material and the corporeal. Themes that will receive special attention include those of freedom and restraint, gender and sexuality, and reason and the passions. By the end of this course, you will come to see that ideas of the self during the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries were very much depended upon how one apprehended the tactility and solidity of others.

Mode of Assessment

Participation – 10%

Students are expected to participate in class discussions and any activities conducted within the classroom.

Presentation – 20%

Make an original argument about the week's primary text and back it up with close-reading evidence.

Final essay proposal – 20%
